DESCRIPTION

London, 1815.

Leela Choudhury refuses to be silent.

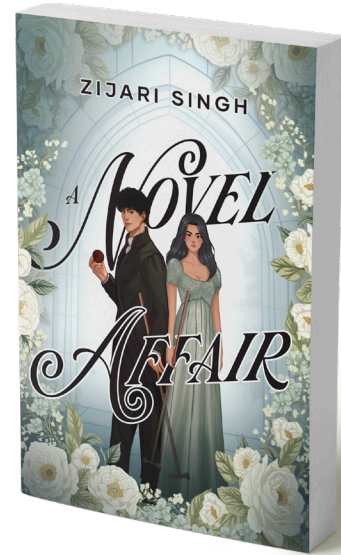

From a hidden alley in Nightingale Court, she runs The Nightingale, an underground bookshop that trades in forbidden texts, political pamphlets, and stories society insists women should never read. When a scandalous serialized romance known as The Pirate's Promise ignites demand across Mayfield, Leela suspects its anonymous female author is not who she claims to be.

She's right.

Viscount Sebastian Toussaint—wealthy aristocrat, favorite of the Crown, and the last man Leela ever expected to trust—is the mind behind the novel that has women whispering, dreaming, and daring to want more. Bound together by secrecy and a shared love of literature, Leela helps Sebastian discreetly distribute his work chapter by chapter, even as the Crown and a powerful bookseller close in.

As censorship tightens and reputations unravel, Leela and Sebastian must decide whether stories can truly change the world, and whether love can survive when everything else is at risk.

In a society determined to control women's voices, one book may prove impossible to silence.

DESCRIPTION

Savanna Davis thought that night in August six years ago—and Dalton Hayes—were nothing more than memories that haunted her dreams. He was her childhood crush, her brother's best friend, and the one man who walked away without warning, leaving her to raise their secret alone.

Now, years later, Savanna's blast from her painful past is back in town visiting from the military—moody, guarded, and dare she say looking incredibly delicious? Tempted by the one guy she never stopped thinking about, Savanna must make a choice: keep her distance and her secret away from him? Or reveal the truth while reaping the benefits? Because now that she's older, she knows better than to get attached—it's all just temporary, anyway.

Dalton Hayes has never stopped thinking about Savanna Davis—or that one passion-filled night they spent together on the beach the night before he left for the military. Now, six years later, he's reluctantly back home in his hometown—the one place he's avoided like the plague.

But when Dalton comes face-to-face with the smoking hot blonde he's tried so desperately to steer clear of—it's obvious the feelings he's tried to suppress come roaring back. When Dalton realizes Savanna is a single mom—to a spunky, familiar, blue-eyed little girl—and isn't happily settled like he originally believed, the narrative of the last few years gets completely flipped upside down

Now with a second chance, what Dalton wants with Savanna is permanent.

The only thing he has to do is convince her he'll stay.

DESCRIPTION

Ancient, powerful artifacts. Vengeful academics. Prodigious partnerships.

Spring, 1924. Clara Fairfax has spent her life being told “no”—denied entry to the post-graduate program at Oxford, overlooked for prestigious archaeological expeditions, dismissed by a world that doubts a woman’s place in history. But when she finally joins a daring journey to uncover the sites of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World, Clara’s determination is tested like never before.

Her discovery of an artifact of Olympian power thrusts her into a deadly game. Hunted by ruthless rivals who would use it to reshape the world, she must rely on an unexpected ally: Henry Ashford, her brilliant and infuriating academic rival. Together, they navigate a treacherous journey across Europe, unravel ancient secrets, and fight to protect humanity from chaos.
